There are a lot of ways parents can do to help their children find their passion. Every child is unique and born with skills, (talents/ problems/ qualifications), and interests of their own. Children are too (old/ young/ strong) to understand what they like doing and what they (don't/ didn't/ haven't). Parents should have a bigger (responsible/ responsibly/ responsibility) in finding their child's passion since he/ she is more at ease at home. Parents should direct the child's energy into something that they are naturally good (in/ at/ for). An easy way to help children figure out (their/ they/ them) passion is by always encouraging them to explore, (guide/ guiding/ guidance) them to dig deeper, and providing them with resources. Do-It-Yourself tasks are a great way to help them explore (their/ them/ they) creativity. You can engage (their/ they/ them) in various arts and craft activities like (painted/ painting/ paint), building a lego architecture, or taking up gardening. Such activities can bring out the interests of a child. The (worst/ best/ well) part while helping them discover their passion is spending quality time with your child and getting to (let/ give/ know) them better. Once they know what they like, you can give (their/ they/ them) access to resources or find hobby classes that can help (their/ they/ them) improve and learn.
