"Studying online means I can fit my studies to my life, rather than fitting my life around my studies," says Anna Enos. Online learning.....for a degree or as a short course, offers flexible study option for people who can't .....to a full time study, or don't have access .....a nearby university. If you've been out of education for a long time, the thought of going back to school and fitting study into a busy .....can be daunting. Caring responsibilities meant that Anna didn't think of studying as an .....until she found an online course that suited her. "I have a two-year-old son called Alfie and looking after him .....up most of my time." She says. She is now studying for a diploma in counseling ..... . "I wanted to make my parents .....and decided that now was the time to pursue the career I've always wanted."

3- Choose the right alternative.

Education is not only a human right in itself, but also a primary vehicle for people to raise themselves (out-up-away) of poverty and to gain the ability to participate fully in their communities. The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, ratified by Kenya, (state- states- stated) that all children have a right to good (quantity-type-quality) education that is effective, relevant, non-discriminatory and (culture-cultural-culturally) appropriate. The Act emphasizes and (promotes-discourages-prevents) equal education opportunities for girls and boys, with the need to address cultural, religious and other forms of biases particularly against girls. However, Kenya's basic education sector continues to experience (gender-ethnic-racial) disparity where girls are more disadvantaged, with major social cultural factors including (late-early-tardy) child marriage, Female Genital Mutilation and child labour. While household poverty is also a (contributing-contributed-contribution) factor, preference of boys' education compared to that of girls' by parents and communities.
